

FCC Regulations on Weakening of Indiana Telephone Privacy Law

It is with great concern that I urge you to oppose the Consumer Bankers Association's challenge on Indiana's Telephone Privacy law. I am a working mother of 2 small children with a husband that travels frequently for work. My days are full of juggling acts and answering the telephone is the least of my favorite acts to do. I strongly believe that if I have a desire to business with a company I will contact them. I refuse to speak to a corporate business that calls my home and disrupts my family time and do not see any benefit in them being allowed by law to contact me.

Not only does this annoyance happen in my home but also I am forced to deal with this at work on a daily basis with phone solicitations from so-called business associations and large banking companies. I believe this telemarketing industry has crossed the line in their First Amendment Rights and I want my privacy back.

I am always reminded by my family of "the good old days" when the telephone was a luxury used to keep in contact with friends and family and I believe that is what it's purpose should be today, not for another greedy corporate business trying to earn another dollar interrupting my family time. .

Again, I urge you to oppose the CBA's challenge and help put an end to the lack of privacy the residents of Indiana are faced with.

Sincerely,

Abby Garner
